

African Critical Inquiry Programme ACIP Workshop Awards

Founded in 2012, the African Critical Inquiry Programme (ACIP) is a partnership between the Centre for Humanities Research at University of the Western Cape in Cape Town and the Laney Graduate School of Emory University in Atlanta. Supported by donations to the Ivan Karp and Corinne Kratz Fund, the ACIP fosters thinking and working across public cultural institutions, across disciplines and fields, and across generations. It seeks to advance inquiry and debate about the roles and practice of public culture, public cultural institutions and public scholarship in shaping identities and society in Africa through an annual ACIP workshop and through the Ivan Karp Doctoral Research Awards, which support African doctoral students in the humanities and humanistic social sciences enrolled at South African universities. For further information, see <http://www.gs.emory.edu/about/special/acip.html> and <https://www.facebook.com/ivan.karp.corinne.kratz.fund>.

African Critical Inquiry Programme Workshops

Each year, ACIP invites proposals from scholars and/or practitioners in public cultural institutions in South Africa to organize a workshop that identifies and addresses critical themes, fundamental questions and pressing practical issues concerning public culture. ACIP Workshops might focus on notions and issues related to publics, visibility, museums and exhibitions, art, performance, representational or institutional forms from methodological, practical, and theoretical vantages. They might examine forms and practices of public scholarship and the theories, histories and systems of thought that shape and illuminate public culture and public scholarship. Workshops encourage comparative, interdisciplinary, cross-generational and cross-institutional interchange and reflection that brings into conversation public scholarship in Africa, creative cultural production, and critical theory. Below is a list of ACIP-supported Workshops:

African Ethnographies

While the practice of ethnography has a long history in Africa, insufficient debate has emerged around it recently on the African continent. Far from being specific only to anthropology, ethnography has become a widespread mode of knowing inside and outside academic spaces. We would like to prompt reflection around this concept and practice, which is slippery, changing, dense, polysemic, and composed of a plurality of voices. The African Ethnographies workshop will raise questions about ethnography across disciplines, its contemporary forms – not exclusively written, and its publics. Ethnography enables conceptual work that transcends simple divides between the empirical, the methodological, and the theoretical. The workshop is particularly interested in understanding how ethnography and its conceptual work can allow us to grasp the complexities of contemporary African worlds, their precariousness, and their becomings. We are interested in exploring: (1) the work of theorization that ethnography makes possible; (2) understandings of public ethnography today; and finally (3) ways to re-rethink ethnography from the African continent. The workshop seeks to open a space of dialogue by bringing together emerging scholars across different disciplines and from institutions across Africa. By engaging in discussions around theory, methods, public engagements, and ethnographic sensibilities and modes of expression, we hope to better understand the challenges of doing ethnography in Africa's contemporary worlds. The workshop will include a performance/lecture that explores the performative potential of ethnographic work and will result in both an edited book and a film about ethnography based on the workshop and interviews with participants.

2018 Missing and Missed

Missing and Missed: The Subject, Politics and Memorialisation of South Africa's Colonial and Apartheid Dead concerns the unfinished business of South Africa's colonial and apartheid dead, whose recovery and reburial have largely happened through the modalities of nation-building and nationalism, as a way of constituting a post-apartheid society. This unfinished business has become a matter for both public life and policy. Considering questions of 'missingness', and the associated practices of investigation, exhumation and memorialisation via an understanding of the forensic as both field and forum suggests a more contested space of debates, disputes, and questions. This has produced a more indeterminate idea of the 'missing person' and the ways in which institutions, instruments, scholarly disciplines, and modes of governmentality intervene to shore up indeterminacy. It prompts us to explore 'missingness' as a condition that is epistemological, ontological, historical, political, legal, and aesthetic, and which evades recovery, inclusion and representation. Among the questions and provocations that this approach calls for are:

- ◆ Elaborations and contestations of missingness/ forensics/ counter-forensics;
- ◆ Governmentalities/ rehumanisation/ citizenship/the dead and the nation;
- ◆ Dilemmas of how to write beyond politics/history/law/art, and broach the question of justice;
- ◆ The ethical, political, epistemological dilemmas involved in naming the missing subject;
- ◆ Critical engagements with testimonial discourse, life-writing, and biographies of the missing;
- ◆ The social, familial, and affective networks in which the missing are inscribed, spectrality, haunting, the uncanny, and affect;
- ◆ Visual and aesthetic grammars of the missing;
- ◆ Reparation, restitution and the limits of the evidentiary.

Organized by Nicky Rousseau and Ciraj Rassool, the Missing and Missed workshop will place interrogations of specific encounters with the missing dead of Southern African colonialism and apartheid into conversation with those emerging from state and administrative violence across numerous settings. Bringing together local and international scholars and graduate students, the workshop will re-examine categories such as enforced disappearances, abductions, missing persons, missing dead bodies, 'the missing', agency, materiality, context, and evidence from scenarios of colonial, apartheid and totalitarian violence, and other scenarios of political violence. This will enable more careful thinking about questions of absence, loss, presence, temporality, spectrality, memory, politics, history, forensics, and justice. In addition to the workshop, international scholars will give a master class/seminar to graduate students and/or participate in a roundtable with members of Iziko Museums. A special journal issue will be prepared from workshop papers.

2017 Secret Affinities

Das Passagen-Werk, Walter Benjamin's unfinished reflection on modernity and history, was the starting point for a two-day workshop – Secret Affinities: A workshop in critical reading and an interrogation of the city in Africa via Walter Benjamin's "Passagen-Werk" – in which sections of Benjamin's text (known in English as The Arcades Project) were discussed with the aim of facilitating cross-disciplinary discussion in relation to heritage, architecture and public history practices associated with cities and the African present. As with Benjamin's positioning in Paris, his 'capital of the nineteenth Century', we work from our vantage point in Johannesburg, city of an African (but also hybrid) modernity, arguably the 'African capital of the twenty-first century.' We follow Benjamin's endeavour to construct 'a world of secret affinities' in which his assemblage of notes, reflections and citations on a host of topics, could begin to inform each other in unpredictable ways.

The very site of the workshop illustrates the layered urban histories, experiences, transformations and architectural imaginations that the workshop sought to examine through particular sites. It took place at what is now known as Satyagraha House, built as a residence in 1907 by German-born Lithuanian architect Hermann Kallenbach with a rondavel-inspired design. Mohandas Gandhi lived there with his friend Kallenbach and others for two years. Today the buildings have been renovated as a heritage site, museum about Gandhi's time in South Africa, and guest house. It is a place steeped in history that we cannot recover outside of imaginary recreation involving rhetorics of display and heritage curation; a place that cannot now be divorced from re-invention or politics, but that nevertheless has been re-invented in austere opulence by a French tourism company working with an historian, curator and heritage architect.

The Secret Affinities workshop formed small discussion and working groups made up of established scholars, artists, architects and postgraduate students. Groups defined projects located at the intersections of architecture, public history, spatial planning, heritage and urban studies, many to be developed through regular meetings during the following year. Their outcomes will be presented in 2018 and could include exhibitions, performances, public lectures or seminars, publications, digital and on-line platforms, or special editions of journals. The Secret Affinities workshop was organized by Noëleen Murray and Brett Pyper, both of University of the Witwatersrand.

2016 Other Universals

Other Universals examined and thought through "universals" that have emanated from experiences of marginality in three Southern Hemisphere regions: the African continent, the Indian subcontinent, and the Caribbean. Ruchi Chaturvedi, Victoria Collis-Buthelezi and Premesh Lalu organized two Other Universals workshops, in May and October 2016, bridged by an ongoing, interdisciplinary, cross-institutional working group composed of post-graduate students and faculty based at University of Cape Town and University of the Western Cape. This allowed for extended and intensive engagement with work revolving around anti-colonial and anti-imperial thought and Other Universals that have been formulated both from an anti-imperial vantage point as well as from marginal positions in parts of the Global South. Each workshop revolved around the work of a key scholar who writes on universals crafted outside the fold of Western humanism; each did public lectures and taught a master class with the working group. The May 2016 workshop with Dr. Aaron Kamugisha (University of West Indies) helped plot shifts in Caribbean identities inflected by experiences ranging from the abjection of slavery to diasporic, internationalist histories; his public lecture considered the Caribbean as a non-national space. The May 2017 workshop with Prof. Gopal Guru (Jawaharlal Nehru University) focused on universals that Dalit groups in India, once known as "untouchables", might aspire to, both challenging their marginality and addressing the pain and humiliation born from the stigma of untouchability. Other Universals will help define new research directions and foster academic and public discourse attentive to these other universals and political thought from the Southern Hemisphere. The reading group and workshops continues for two additional years with further funding from the National Institute for the Humanities and Social Sciences.

2015 Red Assembly – Time and Work

The Red Assembly workshop, held in August 2015, revolved around the question of what it would mean to place art at the center of a historical reading. Simon Gush's installation and film, both entitled Red, were returned to the Eastern Cape and exhibited at the Ann Bryant Art Gallery, in East London, South Africa, the workshop's venue. Gush's work was inspired by the commitment of Mercedes Benz autoworkers to produce a (red) car for Nelson Mandela after his release from prison in 1990 and a nine-week wildcat strike and occupation of the factory by those workers later that same year. Workshop themes related to these events and their presentation in Gush's work. Participants responded to the different forms of expression invoked by the exhibition (film, photography, installation, sculpture, oral and written text, sound) to embark on a discussion around time, work and artwork that returned to questions of how particular subjectivities (racial, gendered, classed) are established and contested and of the role of public culture, cultural institutions and critical scholarship in the postapartheid era. Coming from a number of South African and U.S. institutions, over forty people attended -- artists, curators, public intellectuals, philosophers, historians, activists and postgraduate students in the humanities, humanistic social sciences and beyond. The workshop was convened by Gary Minkley, Leslie Witz and Helena Pohlandt-McCormick.

2014 The Arts of Intervention

The inaugural ACIP workshop, The Arts of Intervention, took place in April 2014 in Oudtshoorn, South Africa in coordination with the 20th anniversary of the annual Absa Klein Karoo Nasionale Fees (KKNK; Little Karoo National Arts Festival). Organized by Brett Pyper, Heidi Grunebaum and Premesh Lalu, the workshop brought together two dozen students, public scholars, and artists for three days that alternated between workshop sessions and discussions and attending festival events – art exhibits; musical performances; plays; discussions with curators, artists, actors/director; a township tour with a local musician/activist and more. Workshop sessions discussed notions of intervention and the post-apartheid arts and culture landscape, seeking to enable new perspectives on the relationship of the arts to questions of public institutions, politics and critique. By coordinating with KKNK, the workshop drew on questions raised by an arts festival that has attempted to address some pressing questions of the transition to a postapartheid South Africa related to non-racism and anti-racism, notions of institutional transformation particular to public culture, the politics of language and community, and scripts of nation and belonging in the arts.
